Become a member of the Steel Institute VDEh

We would be delighted if you would support our work by becoming a member. Membership in the Steel Institute VDEh is open to individuals and companies.

Member Companies

Legal entities may become members of the VDEh Steel Institute if they are active in the field of iron, steel, and related materials.

Steel-producing companies may be admitted as supporting members.

Non-steel-producing companies and other organizations may be admitted as cooperative members.

Interested companies are welcome to contact us:

Individual members

Individuals may become members of the VDEh Steel Institute if they have experience in the fields of engineering, science, industry, and commerce.

The following may be admitted as individual members:

a. anyone who has passed a final examination at a university, college, or university of applied sciences in technical, scientific, or business administration subjects;

b. anyone who has passed a state-recognized final examination as an engineer;

c. anyone who, without meeting the conditions in a) or b), can demonstrate at least five years of professional experience in engineering;

d. anyone who, without fulfilling the conditions in a) through c), can demonstrate exceptional achievements in the field of creative technical work;

e. anyone who holds a managerial position in industry or commerce or maintains ties to technology through scientific or literary work. The Executive Board may adopt supplementary provisions in this regard.

Any person enrolled at universities, colleges, or universities of applied sciences in the subjects listed in § 3, Section 2.1 a) may be admitted as a student member. Upon successful completion of their final examination, the student member automatically receives the status of a personal member.

Information on the benefits of personal membership, our bylaws, and our membership fees, as well as an application form, are available from our membership office:
